

In Bloom

Planted in 2006, the Teaching Gardens at Saint Michael's have quickly blossomed into a centerpiece for learning, and simple appreciation, in the heart of campus. The gardens include plants found in children's literature, which make up the Books in Bloom garden, as well as native plants of Vermont and the campus arboretum. Designed by Professor of Education Valerie Bang-Jensen and Professor of Biology Mark Lubkowitz, with assistance from Alan Dickinson, supervisor of buildings and grounds, the gardens draw students from across disciplines.

To see Bang-Jensen and Lubkowitz in the gardens, discussing the plants and how they use them to teach, visit the magazine's new Web site: www.smcmagazine.com
